問題（教育）　以下の英文を読んで、その内容を45〜55語の英語で要約しなさい。

In recent years, many schools have started giving students tablet computers and asking them to do their homework on these devices. Instead of handing in paper worksheets, students answer questions online and send their work to their teachers through the internet.

Supporters say this change has several advantages. Teachers can check homework quickly because the computer marks some answers automatically. Students can also watch short videos that explain difficult points, so they can study at their own pace. In addition, schools can save money on paper and printing.

However, some people are worried about this trend. Looking at a screen for a long time may hurt students' eyes, and some students find it hard to concentrate because they are tempted to play games or watch other videos. Also, families without a good internet connection at home may have trouble finishing their homework.
